ESSAY EXAMINATION INSTRUCTIONS

Applicable Law

Answer questions on the Florida Bar Examination with the applicable law in force at the time of examination. Questions on Part A are designed to test your knowledge of both general law and Florida law. When Florida law varies from general law, answer in accordance with Florida law.

Acceptable Essay Answer

- Analysis of the Problem - The answer should demonstrate your ability to analyze the question and correctly identify the issues of law presented. The answer should demonstrate your ability to articulate, classify and answer the problem presented. A broad general statement of law indicates an inability to single out a legal issue and apply the law to its solution.
- Knowledge of the Law - The answer should demonstrate your knowledge of legal rules and principles and your ability to state them accurately as they relate to the issue(s) presented by the question. The legal principles and rules governing the issues presented by the question should be stated concisely without unnecessary elaboration.
- Application and Reasoning - The answer should demonstrate logical reasoning by applying the appropriate legal rule or principle to the facts of the question as a step in reaching a conclusion. This involves making a correct determination as to which of the facts given in the question are legally important and which, if any, are legally irrelevant. Your line of reasoning should be clear and consistent, without gaps or digressions.
- Style - The answer should be written in a clear, concise expository style with attention to organization and conformity with grammatical rules.
- Conclusion - If the question calls for a specific conclusion or result, the conclusion should clearly appear at the end of the answer, stated concisely without unnecessary elaboration or equivocation. An answer consisting entirely of conclusions, unsupported by discussion of the rules or reasoning on which they are based, is entitled to little credit.
- Suggestions
 - Do not anticipate trick questions or read in hidden meanings or facts not clearly stated in the questions.
 - Read and analyze the question carefully before answering.
 - Think through to your conclusion before writing your answer.
 - Avoid answers setting forth extensive discussions of the law involved or the historical basis for the law.
 - When the question is sufficiently answered, stop.

Q

JULY 2024 BAR EXAMINATION – CRIMINAL LAW & CONSTITUTIONAL CRIMINAL PROCEDURE/ETHICS

David robbed a courier delivering $15,000 in $20 bills to a business. During the robbery, David shot the courier in the leg. Several witnesses saw the event.

After an investigation, the police obtained a valid arrest warrant for David for armed robbery. A team of police officers led by Officer Jones went to David's known residence. From outside the house, Officer Jones announced that the police had a warrant for David's arrest and ordered everyone to exit the house.

Five people exited, including David, who was arrested and handcuffed. Officer Jones told David and the other people that a team of officers was going to enter the home to secure it. Officer Jones asked David if there was anyone else in the house, or anything in the house that could harm the officers. David said nothing. Officer Jones said to David: "If there's anything that could hurt my team before we go in..." David interrupted Officer Jones and said that there was a firearm in a bedroom drawer.

Officer Jones authorized the team to enter the home. They did not search for the firearm. Instead, they searched closets, behind doors, under beds, and in other places where a person could have been hiding. They found no one else in the home.

David was transported to a police field office where he was interviewed. Officer Smith read David a complete Miranda warning from his department's pre-printed card.

When Officer Smith read that David had a right to have a lawyer present for questioning, David said, "hold on, hold on." Officer Smith paused, but then completed administering the standard warning. Next, Officer Smith asked if David was willing to answer questions without a lawyer present, to which David stated, "I don't really agree with that one."

Officer Smith replied that she wasn't asking if David agreed, she was just telling David that he had a right to have an attorney present during questioning. Officer Smith added: "If you decide to have an attorney present, we're not going to talk about the case until then. But if you want to talk now, we can talk now." Officer Smith added: "You can agree to talk now and always change your mind later."

David replied, "I understand." Officer Smith asked David whether that meant David would speak to Officer Smith without an attorney. David responded, "Yes."

In response to Officer Smith's questions, David denied the robbery. David admitted telling Officer Jones that there was a firearm in a bedroom, but David denied that the firearm belonged to him. When Officer Smith asked David about firearms in the house, he again stated that there was a gun “in a drawer” in “the last room to the right.” He also agreed that the last room to the right was the bedroom that he occupied.

While David was at the police station, officers remained at the residence attempting to obtain a search warrant. Along with the factual basis used to obtain the arrest warrant, the search warrant application added David’s statements to police before and after he received the Miranda warning.

The search warrant was issued and the police searched the house. The police seized $12,000 in $20 bills that were in the freezer. The police also found the firearm from the bedroom drawer that David had mentioned to Officer Jones. Both items were within the authorized scope of the warrant.

David was brought to his first appearance on the armed robbery charge, appointed an attorney, and was released after posting bond. David had dinner with his friend, Sarah. He told Sarah about the armed robbery charge and admitted to her that he was at the business where the crime happened.

David did not know that Sarah was facing criminal charges herself. Sarah contacted Prosecutor about arranging a deal in exchange for cooperation. Prosecutor told Sarah that if she could obtain valuable information from David about the armed robbery, Prosecutor would agree to dismiss Sarah’s charges. Sarah then met with David again, asked him more questions, and David confessed the robbery.

Prosecutor emailed Sarah’s witness statement to David’s attorney along with a plea offer. Prosecutor said that the plea offer would expire in one week and would not be renewed. Because David’s attorney was distracted by other cases, the offer expired before the attorney relayed it to David.

Prepare a memorandum of law for the trial court judge as follows:

- A. Discuss the admissibility of David’s statements to the police before and after the Miranda warning.
- B. Discuss the legality of the police searches of David’s house and the admissibility of the cash and the firearm found in the house.
- C. Discuss the admissibility of David’s statements to Sarah.
- D. Discuss any ethical or constitutional issues raised by David’s attorney’s conduct.

SELECTED ANSWER TO QUESTION 1

(July 2024 Bar Examination)

To: Trial Court Judge From: Clerk

Re: David's Armed Robbery Charge

A. Admissibility of David's Statements to Police before and after Miranda Warning:

Miranda Violations:

The issue is whether David's statements to the police are admissible. The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees the right to counsel before formal charges have commenced. Miranda warnings include (1) the right to remain silent, (2) the right to counsel, (3) the fact that anything you say may be used against you, and (4) that if you cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for you. Miranda Warnings only apply when the individual is placed under custodial interrogation. Custody means that a reasonable person would not feel free to leave. Interrogation means that the police officers are asking questions likely to have an incriminating response. If a statement is made in violation of Miranda, the exclusionary rule applies. Thus, the statement will be suppressed and the government may not use it against an individual. Voluntary statements need not get Miranda warnings to be admissible.

"There was a firearm in the bedroom drawer."

Here, David was arrested and handcuffed. This is custody because a reasonable person would not feel free to leave. David was asked if there was anyone else in the house or anything that could hurt the officers. While this question is likely to produce an incriminating response and may be seen as testimonial, it is also likely justified in the name of officer safety. An officer is not asking about the circumstances of the crime or anything else like that, he is simply asking whether it is safe to enter the home to conduct a protective sweep. Thus, David's initial statement that there was a firearm in the bedroom drawer is likely not in violation of Miranda.

Waiver of Miranda:

The issue is whether David's statements to the police at the station are admissible. The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees the right to counsel before formal charges have commenced. Miranda warnings include (1) the right to remain silent, (2) the right to counsel, (3) the fact that anything you say may be used against you, and (4) that if you cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for you. Miranda Warnings only apply when the individual is placed under custodial interrogation. Custody means that a reasonable person would not feel free to leave. Interrogation means that the police officers are asking questions likely to have an incriminating response. If a statement is made in violation of Miranda, the exclusionary rule applies. Thus, the statement will be suppressed and the government may not use it against an individual. The issue is whether David validly waived his Miranda warnings. An individual may waive their Miranda rights if that waiver is knowing, intelligent, and voluntary. If an individual invokes their right to counsel, it must be scrupulously honored. If an individual invokes their right to remain silent, all questioning must stop until the individual has returned back to their regular life for at least 14 days.

Here, David was taken to the police field office where he was interviewed. At this point, David was in handcuffs and transported by the police to the police station. A reasonable person would not feel free to leave, and he was in custody. Additionally, he was interviewed. Thus, this is likely to produce an incriminating response. At this point, David received his full Miranda warnings. However, the government will argue that David waived the warnings. To invoke Miranda protections, the statement must be clear and unequivocal. When David was told about his right to counsel, he said "hold on." This is not an invocation of the rights nor is it a waiver. Next, David said "I don't really agree with that one." This is not a clear statement, and does not show that he is invoking his right to counsel. He was just stating that he did not agree. Thus, the government was likely permitted to continue questioning. Eventually, David said "I understand" and began answering questions. Although David will say that this was not a waiver and that it was not completely knowing, intelligent, and voluntary, it is likely to be construed by the court as a waiver. Thus, his next statements about the robbery, firearm, and bedroom are likely admissible.

B. Legality of Police Searches and Admissibility of Cash and Firearm:

Protective Sweep and Arrest:

The issue is whether the first search of David's home were unreasonable searches in violation of the Fourth Amendment. The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees all individuals the right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. An unreasonable search occurs when a government actor violates an area where an individual has a reasonable expectation of privacy. To conduct a valid search, the government must have a warrant based on probable cause issued by a neutral and detached magistrate. Probable cause means that it is reasonably likely the crime occurred. Arrests in public are generally permissible. An arrest in the home requires a warrant based on probable cause issued by a neutral and detached magistrate. Probable cause means that it is reasonably likely the crime occurred. An arrest in the home may be valid if there are exceptions to the warrant requirement such as exigent circumstances, fleeing felon, or an emergency. Warrants must be current, not stale, based on good faith, and must be limited to items or people specified within. If an officer has an arrest warrant, they may not search the home because they do not have a search warrant. However, one exception to the warrant requirement for homes is a search incident to arrest. The officers may search an individual and their immediate grab area. Another exception is the protective sweep. If an officer believes that there are other individuals in the home that may be dangerous, the officer may search for the other individuals in places where the individuals could be. This is justified by officer safety concerns.

Here, the police obtained a valid arrest warrant for David for armed robbery. This means that the warrant was based on probable cause, issued by a neutral and detached magistrate. The team went to David's known residence, which is required for an arrest in the home. The officers knocked and announced, which is also required. The officers ordered all of the people out of the home. They can argue that this was for officer safety.

The officers then asked Jones if there was anyone in the home. Jones did not respond to this question. Thus, the officers did not know whether there was anyone else inside the home. As a result, the officers were permitted to conduct a protective sweep for officer safety. The officers found no one else in the home, but only searched behind doors, under beds, and in other places where a person could have been hiding. This was not an illegal search. The arrest was also legal pursuant to a warrant based on probable cause issued by a neutral and detached magistrate.

Search #2

The issue is whether the second search of David's home was unreasonable in violation of the Fourth Amendment. The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees all individuals the right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. An unreasonable search occurs when a government actor violates an area where an individual has a reasonable expectation of privacy. To conduct a valid search, the government must have a warrant based on probable cause issued by a neutral and detached magistrate. Probable cause means that it is reasonably likely the crime occurred. Warrants must be current, not stale, based on good faith, and must be limited to items or people specified within. The police may only look in areas where the contraband may reasonably be located. Anything beyond that exceeds the scope of the warrant and is unconstitutional. However, one exception to the warrant requirement for homes is a search incident to arrest. The officers may search an individual and their immediate grab area. Another exception is the protective sweep. If an officer believes that there are other individuals in the home that may be dangerous, the officer may search for the other individuals in places where the individuals could be. This is justified by officer safety concerns. The search warrant may not be based upon information obtained in violation of the Constitution.

Here, the second search was pursuant to a search warrant. It must have been issued by a neutral and detached magistrate, based on probable cause. The search warrant may not be based upon information obtained in violation of the Constitution. Because the police validly obtained David's statements, they were able to search the home. They were able to search the home for the firearm where it was specified and for evidence of the armed robbery. David will argue that the search exceeded the scope of the warrant because they looked inside the freezer. However, the search was likely valid because that is a place where the evidence of the robbery (money) could reasonably be. Thus, this search was likely valid as it was authorized by the scope of the warrant.

C. Admissibility of David's Statement to Sarah:

Right to Counsel

The issue is whether David's statements to Sarah violated his right to counsel. The Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees an individual the right to counsel in criminal cases. This is also expressly guaranteed in the Florida Constitution. This right to counsel attaches after formal proceedings have begun. The government may not question an individual without their counsel present. It is automatically invoked, the accused need not invoke it.

Here, David was brought before a judge at first appearance and appointed counsel. Thus, the Sixth Amendment clearly attaches. David's first statements to Sara did not violate the Sixth Amendment because they were made on his own. Additionally, Sara was not yet working for the prosecutor so it was not government action. However, David's second statements to Sara where he confessed the robbery were pursuant to Sara's immunity agreement. Thus, Sara was a government actor. As a result, those statements should not be used against David because they would violate the Sixth Amendment.

D. Discuss any ethical or constitutional issues raised by David's Attorney's Conduct:

Obligation to Convey Plea Offers

The Issue is whether David's attorney violated any ethical rules by failing to convey the plea offer before it expired. In Florida, attorneys have an obligation to convey plea offers to their clients. It is ultimately up to the client to make certain decisions in their cases, such as whether or not to accept a plea, whether the client wishes to testify, or certain other decisions. An attorney must convey a plea offer to a client regardless of whether it is a good offer. An attorney may provide counsel to the client about whether it is in the client's best interests, but the final decision rests with the client. Here, Prosecutor emailed Sarah's witness statement to David's attorney along with a plea offer. The plea offer expired in one week and would not be renewed. Thus, David's attorney had an obligation to convey the plea to the client and to counsel him on whether it was a good deal for him. David's attorney's failure to counsel David is an ethical violation.

It is within the prosecutor's rights to say that the plea expires in one week and will not be renewed. However, it is best practice to convey the plea offer to the attorney personally by phone or on the record.

Duty of Competence and Diligence

The issue is whether David's attorney violated any ethical rules by failing to convey the plea offer before it expired. In Florida, attorneys have a duty of competence and diligence to their clients. Attorneys must keep in contact with their clients and keep them apprised of developments in their client's cases. Attorneys must check their emails and respond to clients and opposing counsel within a reasonable time. Here, Prosecutor emailed Sarah's witness statement to David's attorney along with a plea offer. The plea offer expired in one week and would not be renewed. The attorney had a duty to David to keep David updated and to answer emails. This is likely an ethical violation of competence and diligence. However, the attorney will argue that he was distracted by other cases. Regardless, the attorney must provide each client with a duty of diligence and competence.

Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

The Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees an individual the right to counsel in criminal cases. This is also expressly guaranteed in the Florida Constitution. The right to counsel includes the right to effective assistance of counsel. An individual may raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim when their attorney has performed in a deficient way that is not up to community standards. This deficiency must have actually prejudiced the client in such a way that but for the deficiency, there is a reasonable probability that the outcome would have been different. Here, Prosecutor emailed Sarah's witness statement to David's attorney along with a plea offer. The plea offer expired in one week and would not be renewed. If David ultimately takes a less favorable plea or is sentenced to a longer term of incarceration, he may be able to argue ineffective assistance of counsel. David will have to show a reasonable probability that if his attorney had presented him the plea offer, then he would have taken it. Additionally, he must show that his outcome is worse. Thus, depending on the outcome, David may be able to raise ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of the Sixth Amendment.

QUESTION NUMBER 2

JULY 2024 BAR EXAMINATION – FAMILY LAW/FLORIDA CONSTITUTIONAL LAW/ETHICS

Henry and Wanda were married in 2000 in Maine. After the wedding, the couple bought a home and resided in Palm Beach County, where they raised their two children.

During the marriage, Wanda's career has provided the vast majority of the couple's earnings, and she has generally controlled the couple's finances.

Wanda founded a successful technology company in 1998, of which she has always been the majority owner and CEO. The company's value has grown considerably while Wanda has been CEO, and many industry experts credit the company's growth to her leadership. Given the company's success, Wanda is a well-known public figure. Wanda's interest in the company is currently valued at $100 million, and that interest was valued at $4 million at the time of Henry and Wanda's wedding. Wanda's salary has varied throughout her time at the company, but it has been in excess of $5 million per year since 2010. Wanda and Henry live a lavish lifestyle, including frequent travel and expensive meals.

Henry has not consistently worked during the marriage and is currently unemployed. Instead, he has generally stayed home to attend to the couple's children and the family home while Wanda worked long hours at the office. Henry graduated from college with a history major, but has never worked in that field and has no graduate degree. Before Wanda's career took off, Henry had an office job with an annual salary of $50,000.

Henry has a bank account solely in his name that had $15,000 in it when Henry and Wanda married. During the marriage, Henry used the account to pay for some of his personal expenses. He would receive money from Wanda occasionally and deposit it into the account. There is currently $20,000 in the account.

In 2017, Wanda's father died. He left Wanda $1 million in his will.

Two years ago, the couple began experiencing problems in their marriage, and Wanda decided to move to Austin, Texas, where her company maintains an office. She has lived there ever since. Henry still lives in the couple's marital home in Palm Beach County. The couple's two children are now adults and live on their own.

Henry intends to file a petition for dissolution of marriage. Although Henry does not have access to significant sums of money, he seeks to retain Lawyer to represent him in the divorce proceedings. Henry seeks alimony from Wanda. In addition, Henry states that Wanda is concerned about the media obtaining information about her personal finances through the divorce. He believes that Wanda will not want to make any public financial disclosures during the proceedings.

At a meeting with Lawyer, Henry expressed his concern about not being able to pay Lawyer's hourly billing rate if the case requires significant litigation. Lawyer proposed a fee arrangement under which Lawyer would receive a 25% share of any judgment that Henry receives in the divorce. Henry asked whether there are any alternatives to Henry paying Lawyer's hourly rate or the 25% fee arrangement.

Prepare a memo that addresses the following:

- A. Whether the parties' assets will be considered marital or non-marital in the divorce.
- B. The likelihood of Henry receiving alimony from Wanda.
- C. Whether Henry can obtain a dissolution of marriage in Florida, given Wanda's Texas residence.
- D. Under Florida law, each party to divorce proceedings must file a financial affidavit with the court that sets forth assets and liabilities. Assume that Wanda requests to file her financial affidavit under seal. Discuss any issues raised under the Florida Constitution by such a request.
- E. Discuss any ethical issues raised by Lawyer's proposed 25% fee arrangement and any alternatives to Henry paying Lawyer's hourly rate or the 25% fee arrangement.

(July 2024 Bar Examination)

From: Junior Lawyer

RE: Memorandum regarding Henry and Wanda's marital issues and questions

(1) Henry (H) and Wanda's (W) assets (marital versus non-marital)

Marital Assets: Equitable Distribution

When dividing a couple's assets in Florida upon the dissolution of a marriage, Florida follows the equitable distribution approach, which presumes a 50/50 split between the spouses. Marital assets include: 1) assets or debt acquired by either spouse during the marriage or in both spouse's name during the marriage, 2) appreciation or enhancement of non-marital assets by contributions or efforts of either spouse during the marriage, 3) payment of debt on non-marital assets with marital funds during the marriage, 4) accrual of benefit plans during the marriage (401ks, life insurance, etc.), and 5) property held as a tenancy by the entirety whether acquired before or after marriage. Non-marital assets include: 1) assets acquired before the marriage and kept separate, 2) inheritances, bequests, devises, to one spouse, in their sole name during the marriage and kept separate, 3) property exchanged for non-marital assets, and 4) passive appreciation in separate investment accounts.

H and W's home

Here, H and W's home in Palm Beach County will be considered a marital asset, as it was acquired in H and W's name after the marriage, and both of them resided in it, presumably creating a tenancy by the entirety. Regardless, it was an asset acquired after the marriage, and thus, will be considered a marital asset.

H's Bank Account

Here, H's bank account will be considered a marital asset as well, as although H had acquired the account before the marriage with $15,000 in it, he did not keep the account separate, as he deposited money he received from W into the account, and thus, commingled it with marital funds. At most, H could argue that he's entitled to keep the $15,000 before the marriage, as this was assets acquired before the marriage. However, as discussed, H did not keep them separate, as he deposited marital funds from W into his account, and thus, the court will consider the bank account marital property.

W's Company

W's company valued at $4 million will be able to be kept separate from marital assets, but the increase in value after the marriage will be considered marital assets, as W increased the company's worth through her efforts as a CEO. Thus, the valuation of the company at $4 million will entitle W to keep the $4 million from being valued as a marital asset, but the increases in the company's worth after marriage for the years that they were married will be considered a marital asset, as it was an asset acquired by a spouse, W, during the marriage.

W's inheritance

W's inheritance will be a non-marital asset, as it was property acquired through an inheritance, in the name of one spouse, W, during the marriage, and presumably kept separate. If W didn't keep the $1 million separate from W's father, it will be considered a marital asset. However, if she kept the $1 million separate, it will be considered a separate asset as it wasn't an interspousal gift, it was an inheritance in her sole name from her father, falling into non-marital property.

(2) Henry's likelihood of alimony from Wanda

H has a very high likelihood of receiving alimony from W.

Alimony in Florida is awarded on a spouse's need and the other spouse's ability to pay. Alimony is not awarded based on fault (except for adultery and its economic impact on the marriage, discussed below). Permanent alimony has been abolished in Florida. Alimony is no longer a taxable event either for both spouse's, so a court will be more likely to award lesser alimony. There are 4 types of alimony: 1) Pendente Lite (suit money), temporary alimony awarded dissolution proceedings to maintain the status quo, 2) Bridge The Gap, alimony awarded to help transition one spouse from married to independent economic life, and cannot exceed 2 years, and is not modifiable in duration or amount, and is terminable upon the death of either spouse or the remarriage of the receiving spouse, 3) Rehabilitation alimony, alimony awarded to help one spouse obtain job qualifications or education to support themselves independently following the divorce, and cannot exceed 5 years, and involves a spouse submitting a written plan detailing their planned rehabilitation program for job training/education, and it's modifiable upon a substantial change in circumstances, completion of the plan, or non-compliance with the plan, and 4) Durational alimony, alimony awarded based on the length of the marriage, and not available to marriages less than 3 years, it cannot exceed the length of a: 1) 50% of a short-term marriage (less than 10 years), 2) 60% of a moderate term marriage (10-20 years), 3) 75% of a long-term marriage (20 years or more), and is extendable only upon an exceptional change in circumstances proven by clear and convincing evidence. Factors a court considers in determining what types of alimony to award include: 1) duration of the marriage, 2) job qualifications/education level of both spouses, 3) independent assets/economic circumstances of both spouses, 4) both spouse's economic and non-economic contributions towards the marriage, 5) which spouse will be the custodial parent of the children, 6) age/health of both spouses (ability to go back to work), and 7) adultery and its' economic impact on the marriage (if any) and 8) sacrifices of either spouse for the marriage.

Here, H will be successful in being awarded potentially all four types of alimony. For Pendente lite, the facts indicate that H doesn't have funds to petition during the dissolution proceeding, and W has the ability to pay due to her high net worth as a CEO, and H hasn't worked at all in years due to taking care of the children. Thus, H will certainly argue for pendente lite alimony during the dissolution proceedings and will be awarded pendente lite alimony due to his need and W's ability to pay with her millions of dollars in her company and her success as a CEO.

Bridge the gap: H will also argue for bridge the gap alimony, and will likely be awarded it, as H hasn't worked in presumably nearly 20 years, taking care of the children, and before the marriage, H had an office job with an annual salary of $50,000. H should argue that he's entitled to bridge the gap alimony, as the living conditions during the marriage indicate they lived a "lavish lifestyle, including frequent travel and expensive meals," thus, a court will be more inclined to award bridge the gap alimony to H to help transition his living standards from his living standard during the marriage independent economic life. The facts indicate that W is disproportionately much more wealthy than H, so H has a strong case for arguing for bridge the gap alimony to help ease the transition to independent economic life.

Rehabilitation Alimony: H should also argue that despite that he has a history major degree from college, H hasn't worked in nearly 20 years during their marriage, and before the marriage he only had an office job with an annual salary of $50k. If H submits a detailed plan to the court involving his plan to obtain job training or education credentials such as obtaining a graduate degree, he will likely be able to obtain rehabilitative alimony. H stopped working to take care of the children during the marriage and to support W's career, thus, he made sacrifices, and noneconomic contributions taking care of the children. Moreover, H has never worked in the history field, where his degree is in, thus, a court may be more inclined to award rehabilitative alimony because the likelihood of H obtaining a job in that field after never working in it are slim.

Durational Alimony: H should also petition for durational alimony. Here, the marriage indicates that it is around 20 years, so H should be able to petition for long-term alimony. H can demonstrate a need, and W has the ability to pay. Their disproportionate wealth between them will support his request for alimony. Thus, as discussed above, H has a strong case for durational alimony. The award could not exceed 75% of the long-term marriage (20+years). If the marriage is moderate term, it could not exceed 60% of the length of their marriage, the facts do not directly indicate what the exact length of their marriage is.

In sum, H has a strong case for all types of alimony, he has sacrificed his education and career for the marriage, taken care of the children, and has minimal independent wealth, and W has the ability to work, is a high-powered CEO worth millions, and therefore will very likely be awarded all types of alimony.

(3) Henry's request for dissolution of marriage in Florida

Florida is a no-fault state. There are two grounds for dissolution of marriage: 1) one spouse indicates the marriage is irretrievably broken (spouses have fallen out of love) or 2) one spouse has been mentally incapacitated for 3 years. The only defense to divorce is a denial of the grounds, a court may order continuation proceedings or marital counseling/mediation in lieu of a divorce. All dissolution proceedings are heard in the Circuit Court in Florida. Circuit Courts have subject matter jurisdiction over divorce proceedings if the petitioning spouse has been a permanent resident of Florida 6 months prior to the commencement of the proceeding, the court need not have jurisdiction over the other spouse (it doesn't matter if the other spouse isn't a resident of Florida). Venue is proper in the county where the divorce occurred or where the petitioner is resided.

Here, H will be able to obtain a dissolution of marriage in Florida even though W moved to Texas. H is still a permanent resident of Florida, so the Circuit Court will have subject matter jurisdiction over the case, and venue will be proper in the County where H and W resided, Palm Beach County. H has resided in Palm beach County more than 6 months before the proceeding, and he's still a permanent resident. Thus, W's residence is irrelevant, and H will be able to properly have the divorce commenced and proceeded in Florida.

(4) Financial affidavit issues under the Florida Constitution (right to privacy)

W's request for her financial affidavit raises issues under the fundamental right of Access to Public Records right in Florida. W could argue that this invades her right to privacy (also a fundamental right).

Access to Records

The Florida Constitution expressly provides the fundamental right to Access Public and Court records, specifically for the media and newspapers. Regulations that attempt to prevent the right to access public court records will be subject to strict scrutiny, as there is a presumption of making court records publicly accessible for media and newspaper accessibility. The Sunshine law is an extension of the Right to Access court records, and provides that all governmental meetings of public officials shall be open and duly noticed to the public.

Here, W's request that she not make any public financial disclosures during the proceeding will potentially violate the right to access court records in Florida, a fundamental right. W will likely not be successful in challenging this, as she is a public CEO of a very successful technology company, and the Florida Constitution gives a very strong presumption for the access to court records for media companies. Closure of these records is only allowed if there is a public necessity and no other way to meet that necessity. W hasn't demonstrated any public necessity justifying closure, and therefore, she will likely have to make public financial disclosures during the proceedings, as withholding such disclosures would violate the fundamental right to access court records, and the media will be allowed to access such records. As discussed below, W is a well-known public figure, her company's assets seem to be public, and thus, the right to access records will prevent W from failing to make public financial disclosures during the dissolution proceedings, and she will have to make them, and they will be available to the media.

The only way W could file under seal is if she proves a public necessity justifying such exemption, and the seal is no broader than necessary to accomplish that necessity, however this will likely fail. She may be able to argue it violates her right to privacy (discussed below), but the right to access records for media in Florida will prevail.

Right to Privacy

W could argue that this violates her right to privacy, also a fundamental right under the Florida Constitution. The right to privacy provides individuals with the right to be free from governmental intrusion into their daily lives, granting them a reasonable expectation of privacy in their day to day lives. Any regulation that attempts to deprive one of their fundamental right is subject to strict scrutiny, and the government has the burden to prove the law is necessary to achieve a compelling governmental interest, and the least restrictive means to do so.

W could argue that by requiring her to make financial affidavits that sets forth her assets and liabilities, the court is depriving of her fundamental right to privacy due to her public status as a CEO and the media's likely disclosure of her financial assets following W's disclosure. However, this argument will likely fail, as discussed above, the Right to Access Records in Florida is a very strong presumption for the media, and denial of such records is usually held to be unconstitutional absent an exceptional circumstance. W could argue that this is an exceptional circumstance, as normally media companies do not look at financial disclosures of couples in divorce, and this violates W's right to privacy. However, because it appears that W is already a well-known public figure, the valuation of her company is presumably public, the court will likely find that this isn't a violation of her right to privacy, and the access to records fundamental right will prevail.

As an aside, if W refuses to make public financial disclosures, the court can hold her in contempt, or any other tool available to the court.

(5) Ethical issues of Lawyer

Contingency Fees

Lawyer's proposed ethical arrangement is impermissible.

Contingency fees are impermissible in criminal cases or family cases where the amount is contingent on alimony, divorce settlement, or child support. Contingency fees between 15-40% are permissible, however, because contingency fees in family law matters where the amount is contingent on divorce settlements and alimony, this is impermissible.

Attorney's proposed contingency fee is prohibited under the ethical rules of Florida, as the contingency fee is contingent on the amount of divorce money that H would receive from W, which will presumably include alimony as it states "any judgment" that H receives in the divorce. Thus, the proposed arrangement is an impermissible contingency fee.

Alternative: Attorneys' fees during dissolution of marriage

H has an alternative to obtain attorneys' fees. H can petition the court to require W to pay for his attorneys' fees.

A Circuit court has broad discretion to award attorneys' fees during a dissolution of marriage proceeding. Specifically, a Circuit court may award attorneys' fees to the petitioner if they demonstrate a concrete need for such fees (due to inability of funds), and the other spouse has the ability to pay and supply the necessary funds. Factors the court will consider are the expected length of the dissolution proceeding, both party's financial assets, and either party's delay tactics/inability to cooperate.

Here, H should petition the court to ask for attorney's fees from W, and have W supply the funds to pay H's Attorney for the dissolution proceedings. H will be able to demonstrate he has a need, as H hasn't worked in years as he was taking care of the children, and that W has the ability to pay, as W is significantly more wealthy than H as a CEO of a very successful company with millions as her net worth. Moreover, it seems that W may intend to delay the dissolution proceedings by refusing to make public financial disclosures about her net worth, and the court may be more inclined to award H attorneys' fees.

Thus, H has a valid alternative, he should petition the court and ask for attorneys' fees from W to pay provide the necessary funds to Attorney for the dissolution proceeding.

QUESTION NUMBER 3

JULY 2024 BAR EXAMINATION – REAL PROPERTY/TORTS/ETHICS

Tenant, a 90-year-old widow, lives in a single-family rental home in Seminole County, Florida. Recently, Tenant noticed a large crack in the ceiling of the kitchen. Tenant was concerned because two years ago, a similar crack appeared in the master bedroom. The bedroom ceiling then collapsed during a thunderstorm.

While Landlord promptly repaired the bedroom ceiling collapse, Landlord has not responded to Tenant's attempts to contact him about the kitchen ceiling crack. Tenant sent Landlord a letter via first-class mail two weeks ago about the ceiling crack and enclosed photos. In the letter, Tenant also told Landlord that she intended to withhold rent until Landlord fixed the kitchen ceiling crack and terminate the lease if necessary. Since sending the letter, Tenant has left three unreturned voicemails with Landlord.

In addition to the kitchen ceiling crack, there is a pothole that is approximately one foot wide in the home's driveway. Landlord showed the pothole to Tenant when Tenant first rented the home and promised to fix it. Landlord never fixed the pothole, even though Tenant periodically reminded him about it. Tenant avoided the pothole whenever she walked or drove on the driveway.

Last month, however, Neighbor walked up the driveway to give Tenant a piece of mail that had been mistakenly delivered to Neighbor's mailbox. Neighbor had walked up the driveway to bring misdelivered mail to Tenant's home several times over the years. Tenant always thanked Neighbor for bringing Tenant her mail.

This time, Neighbor did not see the pothole because she was watching a video message on her phone. Neighbor tripped on the pothole and injured her knee.

Neighbor limped back home and her husband drove her to the emergency room. A doctor diagnosed Neighbor with a severely sprained knee and recommended that she use crutches for at least two weeks.

Tenant then received a letter from Neighbor's lawyer. The letter demanded that Tenant and Landlord reimburse Neighbor for a $3,000 emergency room bill. The letter also demanded $5,000 in lost wages from Tenant and Landlord because Neighbor, a massage therapist, was unable to work while she recovered from the knee injury.

Tenant contacted Attorney about the matters involving Landlord and Neighbor. Regarding Tenant's dispute with Landlord, Attorney confirmed that the lease between Tenant and Landlord incorporated the Florida Statutes on landlord/tenant matters in all material respects. The lease does not expire until six months from now.

Tenant also told Attorney that she did not pay her rent for this month because of the ceiling crack, even though the rent was due five days ago.

During a conflict check, Attorney found that another lawyer in Attorney's firm prepared a will for Landlord five years ago.

Prepare a memorandum that addresses the following:

- A. Discuss Tenant's rights against Landlord as to the kitchen ceiling crack.
- B. Discuss whether Tenant's withholding of rent gives Landlord the right to bring an eviction lawsuit against Tenant. Your discussion should also address any defenses Tenant may have in an eviction lawsuit and whether Tenant would be required to pay rent during the pendency of a lawsuit.
- C. Analyze whether Neighbor has a valid claim against Tenant or Landlord and any applicable defenses.
- D. Discuss whether any ethical issues preclude Attorney from representing Tenant in a lawsuit against Landlord.

(July 2024 Bar Examination)

TO: Lawyer

FROM: Bar Examiner

A. T v. L--Ceiling Crack

In Florida, there are 4 types of tenancies. Tenancy at will, for years, sufferance, and periodic. Here, this is a tenancy for years which requires a writing and that termination date be, there are two implied covenants that are applicable to a residential lease.

Implied warranty of quiet enjoyment is an implied promise that the tenant will not be disturbed in the use and enjoyment of the property. The covenant is breach by actual, partial, or constructive eviction. To establish a claim for constructive eviction, the tenant must show that there was a substantial interference, that they notified the tenant who has not fixed the problem within a reasonable time and then vacate the premises. Here, the Tenant will argue that the crack is the kitchen ceiling crack in combination with the bedroom ceiling crack is a substantial interference with her ability to use the premises, and that she attempted numerous times to contract the landlord and given him notice of the other crack but he failed to fix the issues. The landlord would argue that the ceiling crack is not a substantial interference because she has not had not stop using the premises of the kitchen, and that she does not have a cause of action because she is still in possession. Overall, because she is still in possession, there is no claim of constructive eviction.

Implied warranty of habitability is an implied promise in residential leases only that is not waivable and provides that the premises are suitable for basic human habitability. It is breached when there is a condition such as no running water or plumbing that makes the premises uninhabitable. If this occurs, the tenant may engage in any of the following: repair and reduce their rent, terminate the lease and vacate, withhold rent until the problem is fixed, remit their payment that is deducted for the cost of repairs. Here, Tenant will argue that the Landlord has breached this warranty because there is a crack in the ceiling of the kitchen, the bedroom ceiling has already collapsed during a thunderstorm, and there is a pothole in the driveway. all of which, are conditions that are not suitable for basic human occupancy by a 90 years old woman because they indicate that there is some structural defect in the home. Moreover, this is Florida, a home's roof should be able to withstand thunderstorms. Given this, the tenant is permitted to withhold rent. the landlord will argue that the premises is suitable for human occupancy because she has been living there for 2 years without any injuries and that she cannot withhold payment because he was never notified of the defect. However, the tenant can argue that she tried to tell him the issue and he ignored it. Moreover, she is entitled to withhold the rent because of the breach.

Landlord duty to make reasonable repairs attributable to ordinary wear and tear.

B. Withholding rent and eviction.

In Florida, if a landlord and tenant have a dispute that is less than $50,000 it must be filed in county court. If the landlord is seeking to evict the tenant for the non-payment of rent, and the tenant has any other defense other than the non-payment of rent, then she can withhold the rent but the withheld rent must be deposited with the court to be held in escrow during the pendency of the litigation, and any other rents that accrue during the litigation must also be deposited into the account as the action progresses.

Generally, a tenant has 3 duties: (1) not commit waste, (2) not to use the premises for illegal purposes, and (3) duty to pay rent. If the tenant breaches the duty to pay rent, then the landlord may terminate the lease and sue to evict the tenant, but they cannot engage in any self-help. All eviction proceedings must go through the judicial process.

Here, the Landlord will argue that the tenant breached their duty to pay rent by withholding their rent, thereby giving him the right to sue for eviction. However, as explained above, if the landlord brings a claim for withheld rent against the tenant, then she will serve as a defense and compulsory counterclaim (a defense that must be brought because it arises out of the same transaction or occurrence as the underlying claim) that she withheld rent because the implied warranty of habitability was breached. If this is her claim then she can withhold the rent but she will have to pay the rent to court the amount withheld and the amount that accumulates during the suit and the court will hold it in escrow. On the other hand, if the tenants brings suit first, then the landlord will assert that the duty to pay rent was breached a move to evict her. However, in Florida, retaliatory eviction is not allowed. Thus, if the court determines that the implied warranty was breached, and awards her the costs of rent, the landlord cannot later evict her as retaliation for bringing suit.

C. Neighbor's claim against Tenant and Landlord

As applied to both the Tenant and Landlord, Florida has abolished joint and several liability. Instead, modified comparative fault is used whereby the judgement is entered against each defendant for their percentage of fault and the plaintiff can only recover that amount which will also be reduced by their percentage of fault so long as they are 50% or less negligent. If the plaintiff is 51% negligent, then the claim is barred.

Negligence: to prevail on a negligence claim, the neighbor will have to show duty, breach, causation, and damages.

(1) Duty: Generally, one only owes a duty to foreseeable plaintiffs, meanings those that are foreseeability likely to be harmed by the defendant's negligence. The duty is the duty to use reasonable care under the circumstances. This is an objective standard. Additionally, as applied to land owner duties, which is at issue here because there was a condition on land that caused harm to the neighbor (the pothole). In Florida, landowners includes possessors' and owners of property. Generally, a uninvited licensee is someone who enters onto the property of another as a guest for their owner purpose but is not invited to come onto the property, and an invited licensee is someone who enters onto the property of another with the owner's consent. The duty that is owed to uninvited licensees is the duty to warn of known latent defects, not engage in intentional or grossly negligent conduct. The duty that is owed to invited licensees is the duty to warn and make safe dangerous conditions on the land.

Tenant: Here, the neighbor will argue that as to the tenant, she was an invited licensee and was owed a duty to use reasonable care to make the premises safe. Neighbor will argue that her "invited" status is implied from the prior conduct of bringing mail to the tenant up the driveway and that she always appreciated it, thereby creating the reasonable impression that she was invited to keep bringing her mail. Thus, she owed her a duty to make the premises safe and warn of nonobvious dangerous conditions.

Landlord: here, the landlord will argue that as to him, he only owed a duty to warn of non-obvious dangerous because while he owns the property he never invited her to come onto it. Thus, she is an uninvited licensee.

(2) Breach: A breach occurs when one falls short of the standard of care. here, the neighbor can show that as to both (1) the tenant breached her duty by not using reasonable measures to make the pothole safer when she knew it was on the premises, and (2) that the Landlord either failed to warn of the dangerous known condition which breached his duty. As to this, he will argue that the danger was open and obvious and there was no danger to warn of it. The neighbor could try to argue that his actions in not fixing it were grossly negligent, however he does not own her a duty to fix the premises, and his actions were not grossly negligent with respect to the neighbor. Thus, a breach can be shown for the tenant but not the landlord.

(3) Causation: causation requires but-for causation and proximate cause. But-for causation is a counter-factual test whereby one asks "but for the defendant's negligence, would the accident have occurred." Proximate cause is foreseeability test whereby liability extends to all harm that flows directly from the negligent act so long as the harm suffered was within the pool of risk that the defendant's negligent act causes and intervening acts that are not unforeseeable.

Tenant: Here, but-for her negligent failure to fix the pothole, the neighbor would not have fallen, and proximate cause is met because the harm suffered (injured knee) is within the pool of risk that makes it negligent to not fix a pothole.

Landlord: (although, the claim likely fails because of breach, the analysis will continue). Here, but-for his negligent failure to warn of the defect, the neighbor would have known of the pothole and not fallen in. Landlord will argue that the neighbor's own negligence was the but-for cause and even with the warning she would not have seen it because she was watching a video on her phone. This explained more below in contributory negligence as a defense but he could raise this here. There is proximate cause, because the new injury is within the pool of risk that failure to warn of the pothole creates.

(4) Damages: the following are the damages that could be recovered.

Compensatory damages are damages intended to place the victim they would be in if the negligent harm had not occurred. This includes past and present economic harm and non-economic harm. Here, neighbor could recover the medical expenses and lost wages, and any emotional harm suffered punitive damages are only recoverable if it can be shown by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant was grossly negligent or intentional and there is a cap of 3x compensatory damages or 500k, whichever is greater. Here, the facts do not indicate that this would be recoverable because as of now there was nothing to show gross negligence.

Defenses:

Comparative Negligence is a defense to negligence claim. If the neighbor choses to sue each one separately, then the tenant and/or landlord can must plead and prove the other's negligent to reduce their own percentage of fault. Here, the landlord will argue that he was not negligent but he tenant was for the above reasons, he bears the burden of proving this, but this would be a good defense because the tenant knew she often came on the property to deliver made and her negligent act of not repairing the driveway was the cause. The tenant will argue, that she is less at fault than the tenant because she acted reasonably under the circumstances to try to have the driveway repairs but the landlord ignored her messages.

As to both of them, they will both argue that the neighbor's was contributory negligent to reduce here recovery or even bar her claim if a jury finds she is 51% or more at fault, because she had a duty to use reasonable care while on the property and she failed to act like a reasonable person by walking onto the driveway, not paying attention, and missing the open and obvious nature of a 1 foot wide pot hole on the property, which a reasonable person would likely have been paying enough attention to see.

D. Ethical Issues

Under the rules of professional conduct, there if any one lawyer in a firm has a conflict of interest it is imputed to the entire firm. as applied to former clients, a lawyer shall not represent another client in the same or substantially related matter if the lawyer has confidential information that could be used to the disadvantage of the former client, and the new client's interest are materially adverse, unless the client gives informed consent in writing. if the lawyer in a firm is conflicted, the other lawyer may still represent the client if they screen the other lawyer, do not apportion him a fee, and provide the former client with notice that the procedures were followed. Here, the other lawyer is the firm would have a conflict because financial information about the Landlord was likely produced during the will creation which could be used to his disadvantage in this landlord tenant dispute. However, assuming that this lawyer did not participate in the matter or does not have any confidential information, he can represent tenant if the other lawyer is screened, given no fee, and the firm gives notice of the conflict to the landlord.

FEBRUARY 2025 BAR EXAMINATION – CONTRACTS

Paige Parker has come to your office with a dispute regarding the construction of her guesthouse. It began with a series of text messages between her and Dylan Daniels, who owns DD Construction, Inc.:

Paige: Hi Dylan! I was hoping to hire you to build a guesthouse. I just emailed you the plans.

Dylan: Sounds great! I've looked at the plans and my company does that kind of work. What's the project timeline?

Paige: A landscaping company is doing major work on my entire property, including where the guesthouse would go. They will be working for at least a few months, but are starting at the guesthouse site and should be done with that part on May 1. The architect says the guesthouse construction should take about five months, but we need it finished before my family visits on November 1. I have nowhere to put them in my house!

Dylan: We will be able to start construction that week. Five months is realistic—it should be ready by early October.

Paige and Dylan signed a formal agreement, and Paige picked the siding and other materials she wanted. She chose a siding called “Rustic River Rock” that she especially liked. The relevant provisions of the agreement are:

BUILDING CONTRACT

This Agreement is between DD Construction, Inc. (“Contractor”), and Paige Parker (“Client”). In consideration of the below promises, the parties agree as follows:

1. Contractor is responsible for supplying the materials and constructing the Client's desired guesthouse according to plans previously provided by Client (“The Building”).
2. Contractor will begin work on The Building the day after completion of Client's ongoing landscaping services.

3. The total price for Contractor's services is $60,000, which is due within seven days of execution of this Agreement, $10,000 of which shall be "the Deposit."

7. The Building's siding will be stone imitation siding style Rustic River Rock.

23. In the event of a delay or cancellation of the work described in this Agreement because of circumstances outside of Contractor's control, Contractor is not liable for any damages except the return of Client's $60,000. Notwithstanding any other language in this Agreement, if Client cancels the work for any reason, then Contractor shall have the option to keep the Deposit as compensation for its time and efforts.

31. This agreement supersedes all prior agreements between the parties and constitutes the entire agreement between the parties with respect to the work to be performed.

Paige paid the $60,000 three days after executing the agreement, and Dylan arrived with a work crew at the property on May 2. The landscaping company was still working on the property, but had finished at the building site on May 1.

When Dylan arrived, he explained that DD Construction would not have the Rustic River Rock siding available to finish by November. He offered to use "Radiant River Rock" siding instead. Although the two siding styles look similar, Paige could tell the difference, as Radiant River Rock has brighter tones.

Paige refused the substitute siding and sent away Dylan and the work crew. Paige has since learned that DD Construction had obtained the Rustic River Rock siding for Paige's project, but later entered into a more profitable contract involving the same siding with another customer. DD Construction decided to use the Rustic River Rock siding on the other project and could not obtain more to use on Paige's project because of a recent supplier shortage.

DD Construction sent Paige $50,000, but is refusing to return the $10,000 deposit. DD Construction maintains that it never breached the agreement, as Paige fired DD Construction while the landscaping company was still at the property.

Paige found a replacement builder with the proper siding who charged her $80,000, but could not finish the project until November 7 because of the short notice. Because the guesthouse was not finished by November 1, Paige paid $1,500 to put her visiting family in hotel rooms while the work was finished.

Paige seeks assistance from your law firm. Prepare a memorandum as follows:

- A. Discuss whether Paige has a viable breach of contract claim against DD Construction. Your discussion should include any arguments that DD Construction may raise against Paige's claim.
- B. Discuss the damages that Paige is likely to recover if she prevails on a breach of contract claim against DD Construction.

MEMORANDUM

From: Examinee

Subject: Breach of Contract Claim against DD Construction

Breach of Contract

Contract Formation

In order to form a contract, the parties need to have an offer, defined as a manifestation of a willingness to be bound by terms of a contract that creates a power of acceptance, acceptance, assent to be bound by the terms of the offer, and consideration, any benefit or legal detriment. Here a contract was formed when Paige and Dylan signed the building contract.

UCC vs. Common Law

The UCC applies when a contract deals primarily with the sale of goods. In this case, the contract is clearly one for services, construction, meaning the UCC doesn't apply. Under common law, a contract is binding if it sets out all material details. In this case, given the excerpts, it appears that all material terms, including price, start date, materials, etc. are present, meaning the contract is valid. Even though the date term is not a fixed date, it still allows the parties to understand when the construction will start, meaning the contract is valid.

Paige's Claims of Breach

The key debate in this case is going to be determining who breached the contract when. This section will outline Paige's claim of breach, followed by potential defenses DD Construction may raise. Though DD has some potentially viable defenses, ultimately Paige is likely to succeed in her breach of contract claims.

Anticipatory Repudiation

Paige will argue that DD Construction repudiated the contract on May 1, when Dylan informed Paige that he would not be able to get the right rock for the contract. A party can claim anticipatory repudiation when the other side clearly manifests an intention to breach the contract. If a party has received a reliable communication that the opposing party would not be able to perform their obligations under the contract, the non-breaching party does not have to wait until performance is due to seek a remedy. Paige can argue that the type of rock was a material term of the contract, and that, once informed that DD Construction wouldn't be able to procure the rock, Paige was justified in relying on that representation and breaching the contract.

DD Explicitly Breached the Contract on May 2

The contract between the parties clearly indicates that DD is to begin construction the day after the landscapers finish their work. Paige can argue that the landscapers finished on May 1, and that, since DD Construction did not begin building on May 2 or any day after, they materially breached the contract.

DD Construction's Defenses and Counterclaims

DD's only defense is that Paige breached the contract first. There are a few ways that they can argue this; however, both are likely to fail.

DD's Performance was not due on May 2

DD Construction may argue that, based on paragraph 2 of the contract, the work was supposed to be done once the landscaping company was finished landscaping. DD Construction can argue that the landscapers had not finished their work on May 2nd, meaning DD's performance was not due at that time and that they had time to perform. Paige is likely to respond that, though the landscapers were still working, the parties understood the start date to mean the date when the landscapers were done with the guesthouse area.

Parole Evidence Rule

If Paige argues that the parties had a different understanding of the start date based on prior communications, DD is likely to invoke the parole evidence rule. The parole evidence rule prohibits evidence outside the contract from being used to change the contract. In this case, DD has a stronger case because of the integration clause of paragraph 31; however, Paige can successfully argue that she is not seeking to change the start date but rather, that the texts serve to show the parties interpretation of what the start date means. In this case, the texts are clear that both parties understood the term "the day after completion of Client's ongoing landscaping services" to mean the completion of the landscaping services on the guest house portion of Paige's property. Therefore, DD will not be able to argue that their performance was not due to start on May 2nd.

Substantial Performance and Paige's Repudiation

A party can claim substantial performance by showing that they performed their major duties under the contract and that any nonconforming performance was not a material breach. Here, DD can argue that the type of rock siding was not material to the contract and that, by offering a near identical rock siding, DD substantially performed its obligation under the contract. Because DD substantially performed, Paige's refusal of the substitute material constitutes a repudiation by her, and therefore DD was justified in reasonably relying on Paige's repudiation. Further, DD can show that they detrimentally relied on Paige's refutation by contracting for a different customer. This argument is likely to fail, as the aesthetics of the guesthouse was a material purpose of the contract. Though the replacement rock siding would be a fair substitute, Paige had a good faith reason to refuse the substitute, meaning she did not breach her obligations.

Mutual Mistake, Impossibility, and Frustration of Purpose

A contract is void when the two parties are both mistaken as to a material term, and that they make the mistake in good faith. In this case DD could argue that both parties were mistaken as to the availability of Rustic River Rock, and because of that, the contract is void. DD could likewise plead that the contract was impossible to perform because of the inability to procure Rustic River Rock, or that the lack of the rock frustrated the purpose of the contract. These defenses would all fail though, because in this case, the risk of the rock being unavailable appears to be allocated to DD Construction. As to mutual mistake, DD likely had a duty to check the availability of the rock before entering into the contract.

As for impossibility, DD should have contemplated the unavailability of the rock, and further, Paige later learned that DD was able to procure the rock, meaning the contract was not impossible. As to frustration of purpose, the court will likely find that, though the rock siding was unavailable at the time, the purpose of the guest house was to build a house and that, because DD Construction did not perform at all, they cannot plead frustration of purpose.

Damages

If Paige is successful on her breach of contract claim, she could recover different types of damages.

Restitution Damages

A court can grant restitution damages to give the succeeding party the value of the deal they bargained for. In this case, Paige expected to pay $60,000 to have a guesthouse constructed on her property. Because of the other parties breach, she had to pay $90,000 ($80,000 for the replacement builder plus the $10,000 deposit DD Construction didn't return to Paige) to have the house completed, and further, she had to pay $1,500 to house her family in a hotel. If the court were to grant restitution damages, Paige would be entitled to the terms of the contract, meaning DD Construction would owe her $20,000 for the increase in price to have the guesthouse constructed, as well as the $10,000 deposit.

Paige could also claim the $1,500 in hotel fees as restitution damages. In general, breaching parties are not liable for unforeseeable consequences from their breach; however, in this case, Paige made DD Construction aware that time was of the essence because she had family coming into town. If Paige is successful in showing that DD Construction had notice of her special damages, she could be entitled to restitution for her hotel expenses.

DD could argue that Paige failed to mitigate her damages, specifically that $80,000 was not a reasonable amount to pay for the house to be built, and therefore that they aren't fully liable for the $20,000 difference in price. This defense is likely to fail because, given the facts, $80,000 does not seem to be an unreasonable price to have a guesthouse built on short notice.

Liquidated Damages

DD will likely argue that it is entitled to keep the $10,000 as liquidated damages per the building contract; however, this is likely to fail. In general, courts in Florida are hesitant to uphold liquidated damages clauses, and they will not uphold liquidated damages that are an unreasonable penalty. In this case, DD performed no work outside of showing up with a work crew on May 2. The facts do not indicate they purchased any material or performed any services for Paige. Because DD seeks to keep $10,000 for doing no work, a court will find that this is an unreasonable penalty and DD will not be able to keep the deposit.

Reliance Damages

A court can award reliance damages to effectively put the client back in the place they were before the contract. Under a reliance theory, the only damages Paige would be able to seek would be the $10,000 deposit she gave to DD. Because reliance damages would result in a reduced award, Paige should not seek reliance damages.

QUESTION NUMBER 2

FEBRUARY 2025 BAR EXAMINATION – FAMILY LAW/TORTS

One year ago, Wendy was involved in a car accident. Wendy was stopped at a red light when she was struck from behind by a General Housewares Inc. (“GHI”) delivery truck. The truck was on its way to make a delivery within GHI’s normal business hours. Wendy had unfastened her seatbelt just before the accident, attempting to get something from her purse. In the accident, Wendy was thrown from the car and suffered severe injuries to her head, back and limbs. The police investigation revealed that the GHI driver, Kyle, was texting his girlfriend about groceries at the time of the accident.

Wendy was in the hospital for three months and underwent multiple surgeries. The accident left her substantially disfigured all over her body, including visible scars on her face. In addition, Wendy lost most of the use of her left arm and is in constant pain. Finally, the head trauma has made it very difficult for Wendy to perform mental tasks. Thus far, Wendy has incurred $500,000 in medical bills, $5,000 of which she has paid for because insurance did not cover all costs.

Before the accident, Wendy was a successful CFO making $150,000 per year. However, after the car accident, she made $50,000 last year because of missed work and the inability to fully perform her duties. While her employment contract prevents her from being fired under these circumstances, the contract ends in 12 months. Because of the terms of the contract, she will again only make $50,000 this year because of her likely inability to fully perform her duties.

The accident also negatively affected Wendy’s marriage. Her husband, Howard, exhausted his leave and quit his engineering job to take care of Wendy and their 4-year-old son, Brian. After taking on this new caretaker role, Howard began going out to drink at local bars so frequently that Wendy believes Howard has an alcohol problem. Howard has become very short-tempered and irritable, and he argues with Wendy more frequently. While he has never hurt her or Brian, Wendy believes that Howard’s behavior is escalating to the point that he may do so one day.

Because of Howard’s change in behavior, Wendy is considering filing for divorce after 15 years of marriage. If she does, she wants to have exclusive parental responsibility over Brian. She does not want to coordinate with Howard about Brian’s care due to Howard’s alcohol use and temper. Wendy also does not want to pay Howard alimony because she believes he can return to his old engineering job, albeit with some updated training. In that job, Howard made at least $100,000 per year.

Because Howard is unemployed, Wendy’s income is the family’s sole source of income. Wendy’s current income is barely enough for Wendy to pay the family’s bills.

Wendy also wants exclusive use and possession of the house for herself and her son, as the house has been modified to accommodate her physical disabilities and is close to Brian's school. Wendy bought the house in Tampa 10 years ago in her name because at the time, Howard's credit would have increased their mortgage rate.

Wendy seeks your legal advice. Prepare a memorandum as follows:

- A. Evaluate claims that Wendy may have resulting from the car accident, including theories of liability, potential defendants and their defenses, and what types of damages she may be able to recover. In your analysis, assume that texting while driving is a traffic law violation in Florida.
- B. Evaluate whether Wendy can obtain exclusive parental responsibility over Brian; whether Wendy can obtain exclusive use and possession of the home; and whether Wendy will have to pay alimony to Howard, and if so, what kind(s) of alimony.
- C. Assume that Wendy is offered a settlement for the car accident that includes itemized payments for lost wages, pain and suffering, reimbursement for medical expenses, and future medical payments. Analyze whether any of those payments would be subject to equitable distribution if Wendy receives the settlement proceeds before she files for divorce.

SELECTED ANSWER TO QUESTION 2

(February 2025 Bar Examination)

A. Car Accident

This issue involves the law of torts. Kyle, the GHI driver, maybe be liable under the theory of negligence. Under the theory of respondeat superior, Kyle's company, GHI might also be strictly liable under vicarious liability. Wendy may choose to sue one or both of those parties. If Wendy chooses to sue one and not the other, the non-sued party may seek contribution or indemnity. However, Florida has abolished joint and several liability, meaning one party may not be asked to completely fulfill the damages, even where another party probably should pay.

Wendy is likely to succeed in a negligence claim against Kyle and on a vicarious liability claim against GHI.

Wendy v. Kyle:

Negligence:

Wendy may choose to sue Kyle on the theory of negligence. Negligence requires a duty, breach, causation, and damages.

Duty requires for a relationship to exist among parties so that a duty is owed. The standard for duty is that of a reasonably prudent person in the same or similar circumstances. Here, Kyle owes Wendy the duty of a reasonable prudent driver. As a driver on the road, Kyle owes this duty to other drivers on the road, which Wendy is. Therefore, Kyle owes a duty to Wendy to drive prudently. Therefore, duty is met.

Breach requires for a party to fall short of the required duty. Here, Kyle breached his duty by taking his eyes off the road to text his girlfriend. Therefore, the element of breach is met.

Causation requires a causal link between the breach and the harm. Two types of breach must be met: but-for causation and proximate causation.

But-for causation is met when but-for the defendant's conduct, the harm would not have occurred. Here, but-for Kyle's texting while driving, he would not have rear-ended Wendy. If Kyle had been paying attention, he probably would have been able to stop in time.

Therefore, but-for causation has been met.

Proximate causation requires the harm to be foreseeable from the breach. Here, Kyle could foresee that texting while and taking his eyes off the road could result in him rear-ending someone. Therefore but-for causation has been met.

Lastly, the plaintiff must have suffered some harm. Here, Wendy clearly suffered harm as she suffered severe injuries from being ejected from the car. She was hospitalized for an extended time, underwent surgeries, was disfigured, had head trauma, incurred medical bills, and lost wages. Under the eggshell plaintiff rule, the harming party takes the plaintiff as they find them. This means Kyle is also liable for all the subsequent foreseeable injuries resulting after the initial accident. Therefore, the element of harm has been.

Therefore, the elements of negligence have been met, and Wendy is likely to succeed in a negligence claim against Kyle.

Negligence per se:

Wendy may also argue for a case of negligence per se. This results when a statute exists which is intended to prevent the type of harm from happening to a class of people under statute. Here, Florida has texting while driving under a traffic law violation. Here, Kyle was texting while driving. Here, a car accident resulted and Wendy was the victim of the car accident. Therefore, this clearly meets the requirements for negligence per se. This means that the elements of duty and breach have been met and that the case will go to the trier of fact.

Comparative negligence:

Kyle will argue that Wendy was comparatively negligent. Under Florida law, comparative negligence has been modified, so that a plaintiff may not recover if they are more than 50% at fault. Here, Kyle will argue Wendy was comparatively negligent by removing her seatbelt just before the accident. It is unclear how much at fault Wendy is, but her not being buckled definitely contributed to the harm she suffered. Therefore, Kyle will be able to get the damages owed reduced by her percent of negligence.

Wendy v. GHI:

Vicarious Liability:

Wendy will be able to sue GHI on a theory of vicarious liability. Vicarious liability requires an employee-employer relationship under which the employee is acting within the scope of employment. Mere detours from the scope are not sufficient to relieve liability, but frolics, longer and more deranged from employment, may relieve liability. However, employers are not liable for the intentional torts of their employees. Here, Kyle was acting in the scope of his employment as making a delivery during business hours. By merely texting his girlfriend while driving, Kyle did not make a frolic. Kyle was negligent and not intentional. Therefore, GHI will be strictly liable under a vicarious liability theory.

Therefore, Wendy will likely succeed on a claim of vicarious liability.

Damages:

Wendy is likely to get compensatory damages for her injuries. She can get damages for the pain and suffering, medical bills, and lost wages.

B. Family Law:

Parental responsibility:

Parental responsibility of a child is based on the jurisdiction of the state the child has resided in for the last six months. Here, this is presumably Florida, since they have lived in Tampa for 10 years, and so Florida has original jurisdiction. Child support and parental responsibility are governed by the UIFSA and the UCCJEA.

The custody of a child is presumed to be shared equally between parents. The custody of a child is based on the standard of the best interest of the child. Wendy must show circumstances that shared custody is not in the best interest of Brian. While Howard has been drinking a lot, he has never hurt Wendy or Brian. However, Wendy may argue that a drunk parent is irresponsible to watch a child. Depending on what Wendy can show, she may or may not get full parental responsibility. The court may devise a plan where Howard gets supervised visitation. Depending on what Wendy shows, the court may or may not award equal parental responsibility.

Family Home:

While Wendy bought the house in her name, it is presumed to be a marital asset if bought in the course of the marriage. Since the house accommodates Wendy's physical disabilities and would prevent Brian from changing schools, the court will likely allow Wendy and Brian to stay in the house. However, if Howard is Brian's primary caretaker, the court would be less willing to exercise this option.

Alimony:

A divorce proceeding is under the jurisdiction of Florida if one party has been domiciled in Florida for at least six months. Alimony is based on the need of the recipient and the ability of the payor to pay.

The following types of alimony are available: pending litigation, bridge the gap, rehabilitative, and durational alimony.

Since Howard is unemployed, he may need some funds during the divorce proceeding. This would qualify him under alimony which is pending litigation.

Howard may also try to get bridge the gap alimony, which would help me get back on his feet after the divorce. This type of alimony is not modifiable and cannot exceed 2 years.

Here, Howard is unemployed but is easily employable with some updated training. Howard is a good candidate for rehabilitative alimony, which is available for educational and training needs, and is not to exceed five years. This can be modified based on a substantial change in circumstances. Howard may be awarded this to get his updated training.

Since Howard is so employable and only recently quit his job to become a caretaker, he is less likely to get durational alimony. Durational alimony takes into account the length of the marriage. For marriages 3-9 years, the amount is 50%. For marriages 10-19 years, the percentage is 60. For any marriage 20 years and up, the amount is adjusted by 75%.

Here, Howard and Wendy have been married for 15 years. Thus, Howard may qualify for durational alimony of 60%.

However, Howard will get a job pretty quickly and Wendy has lost her high earning capacity after the accident. Therefore, Howard is less likely to get alimony because he doesn't need it be very much and also because Wendy cannot pay the amount.

In conclusion, Wendy may pay Howard some short-term alimony, but is not very likely to pay Howard longer alimony.

C. Settlement - Equitable Distribution:

In divorce proceedings, equitable distribution disperses marital property under an equity guise.

Equality may be sought or incidental, but it is not presumed. Marital property includes property bought jointly in the marriage, interspousal gifts, and any other assets during the marriage. Non- marital property includes assets prior to the marriage, gifts by inheritance, and more.

Here, Wendy has been awarded a settlement for lost wages, pain and suffering, medical expenses, and future medical payments. Looking at this from a fairness standpoint, Howard may be owed some settlement proceeds for his contribution during the marriage. Since Wendy has lost wages, Howard has had to take up a caretaking responsibility. Howard should be compensated for having to make up for Wendy's lost wages. Therefore, Howard should be compensated with some lost wages during the marriage, but not after the marriage has ended.

Further, Howard did not suffer pain as a result of the car accident. This is a more individualized award designed solely to compensate Wendy. For this type of damages, Wendy should receive them alone. Therefore, Howard should not receive pain and suffering settlement proceeds.

Next, medical expenses may have come out of Howard's pocket, too, so he may be compensated for his contribution. Therefore, the medical expenses proceeds may be subject to equitable distribution depending on Howard's part played.

Lastly, future medical payments will likely result mostly after the divorce. Howard should not be the one to receive these if he is no longer married. Wendy is the one who will need to pay these costs. Therefore, Howard is not likely to get equitable distribution for this type of settle proceeds.

In conclusion, some of the settlement proceeds may be subject to equitable distribution based on if they were incurred during the marriage and were individualized.

QUESTION NUMBER 3

FEBRUARY 2025 BAR EXAMINATION – FLORIDA CONSTITUTIONAL LAW/CONSTITUTIONAL CRIMINAL PROCEDURE/ETHICS

John is a political activist who has resided in Duval County with his loved ones for his entire life. For the past ten years, John has worked nights at a local hotel, so that he might pursue his political interests by day.

Senator maintains an office in Duval County. Beginning last year, John became a member of a registered political committee that would stage daily protests on the sidewalks outside of the Senator's office.

The protests consist of the committee members carrying picket signs denouncing Senator's political positions. Because the Senator's office is located in an area with high pedestrian and vehicle traffic, the protesters have caught the attention of many locals and tourists.

Concerned about the number of people traveling in the county on holidays, the county properly enacted a new ordinance that took effect November 1. The ordinance prohibits all protesting within the county on the following holidays: Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Veterans' Day, and Thanksgiving. Violation of the ordinance is prosecutable as a misdemeanor offense, punishable by a fine of $500 and up to 60 days in jail.

On Veterans' Day, John and other members of the political committee arrived on the sidewalk outside of the Senator's office to protest. Local law enforcement officers informed John that under the new ordinance, no protesting was permitted on Veterans' Day and the group must disperse.

John told the officers that he intended to remain and hold his picket sign, like every other day. John raised his picket sign into the air. The officers immediately arrested John for violating the ordinance.

After his arrest, John was searched. The law enforcement officers located a cell phone in his pants pocket. The officers examined the cell phone to make sure that it was not a weapon or hiding narcotics. John had not activated a lock code on the cell phone, so the officers also reviewed John's photos, text messages, and an application entitled "My Medical Records," containing the last 18 months of John's medical records. The officers also found text messages showing that John knew about the ordinance and intended to violate it by protesting on Veterans' Day.

John, who had never been arrested before, was booked in the county jail for violation of the ordinance with no bond. At the initial appearance later that morning, the judge maintained the no bond status through the day after Thanksgiving to ensure that John would not violate the ordinance again.

Later that day, Lawyer received a call from Patty, the Vice President of the political committee of which John is a member. Patty wanted to hire Lawyer to represent John. She requested that Lawyer bill the committee directly for Lawyer's work and that Lawyer keep Patty and the committee updated on the case's progress. Patty also requested that as a condition of the representation, Lawyer would agree to take John's case to trial and appeal any court rulings adverse to John.

Prepare a memorandum as follows:

- A. Discuss the claims that John can raise under the Florida Constitution. Do not discuss sovereign immunity.
- B. Discuss any ethical issues raised by Patty's proposal for Lawyer's representation of John.

SELECTED ANSWER TO QUESTION 3

(February 2025 Bar Examination)

MEMORANDUM

To: Partner

From: Bar Candidate

Re: Constitutional Issues/Ethics

You have asked me to write about constitutional issues John can raise under the Florida Constitution and to discuss ethical issues by Patty's representation. This analysis follows.

A. Freedom of Speech

I. State Action

The issue is whether there was state action. An individual may only sue upon infringement of their constitutional protections if there was state action. State action is present when the state or its subdivisions is acting or where a private actor is performing duties normally performed by the state.

Here, John was arrested after he violated a county ordinance. The ordinance was made by Duval County and he was arrested according to the ordinance. Therefore, there was state action.

II. Scrutiny that Applies

The issue is whether the ordinance is a violation of the constitutional right to free speech under Florida's Constitution. The Florida Constitution gives citizen a right of freedom of speech.

Generally, how much speech can be restricted depends on where the speech is being made. A public forum is a forum that is traditionally open for speech, such as parks and roads. A designated public forum is a forum that has been designated for speech at certain times, such as schools on the weekend for events. A limited public forum is a forum that is limited to certain speech at certain times. A nonpublic forum is a forum not traditionally open for speech. A regulation is content neutral if it is not based on subject matter or viewpoint. If speech is limited in a public forum or designated public forum, strict scrutiny applies unless the limitation is a time, place, and manner regulation that leaves open alternative means of communication and is narrowly tailored to an important government purpose and content neutral. If a restriction is in a limited public forum or nonpublic forum, the regulation must only be viewpoint neutral and reasonably related to a legitimate government interest. Additionally, restrictions that are not content neutral are subject to strict scrutiny, while restrictions that are content neutral are subject to intermediate scrutiny. Strict scrutiny requires the government to prove that a regulation is necessary for a compelling government interest. Intermediate scrutiny requires a government to show the regulation is narrowly tailored to an important government purpose.

Here, the ordinance restricts protesting in Duval County on Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Veterans' Day, and Thanksgiving. The county may argue this is a time/place/manner regulation because it only restricts speech on certain holidays and not every single day. The speech is limited everywhere in the county, however and no alternative means of communication are left because protests cannot be held the entire day anywhere on those holidays. Additionally, only protesting is prohibited, but other kinds of speech is allowed, which means it is likely this is a content based restriction subject to strict scrutiny. Duval County would argue it had a compelling government purpose-- concern for people traveling on the holidays because the protestors in front of Senator's office have caught the attention of tourists. This likely is a compelling government purpose because counties have an interest in keeping their citizens and visitors safe. The regulation, however, is likely not necessary for this purpose. If the tourists were attentive to protestors outside the Senator's office, the regulation could have been limited to speech during the holidays outside the Senator's office during certain times (i.e. times when tourists are usually around). A total ban of speech everywhere in the county, however, is likely not necessary. Therefore, the regulation likely violates John's freedom of speech.

III. Special Law

The issue is whether the county was permitted to pass the ordinance. Under the Florida Constitution, a general law is a law that applies to everyone in the state. A special law is a law that applies only to a certain portion of the state or a group within the state. A special law requires notice before being passed such as by publication in the affected area or a referendum to be passed. A general law of local application is a law that applies based on certain criteria (exp. to counties with certain populations). There must be a nexus between the criteria and the purpose of law. Here, the ordinance applied only in Duval County, so it was a special law. The ordinance passed on November 1, very close to the Veteran's day holiday. Despite that, it does not appear that individuals were given notice or were able to vote in a referendum to approve the law. If there was no vote or notice, the ordinance is invalid.

IV. Due Process

The issue is whether the ordinance violates due process. Under the Florida and federal constitutions, individual have a right to due process when their life, liberty, or property is taken. Under the substantive due process component, individuals' liberty cannot be taken without due process. If the government takes a fundamental right, strict scrutiny applies. Strict scrutiny requires a government to show the law is necessary for a compelling government purpose. If the government takes a right that is not fundamental, rational basis applies. Rational basis requires the plaintiff to prove the law is not rationally related to a compelling government purpose. The right to free speech is a fundamental right.

As explained above, the ordinance violates free speech to strict scrutiny applies. As explained above, the ordinance does not pass strict scrutiny and therefore, is a violation of due process.

V. Search Incident to Arrest

The issue is whether police were permitted to search John upon arresting him. Under the Florida and federal Constitution, individuals have a right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. A search is presumed unreasonable unless it is based on a warrant signed by a neutral and detached magistrate and based on probable cause in the places to be searched or items to be seized. There are exceptions, however. Where there is probable cause to believe a person has committed a criminal offense, he may be arrested in public. Upon arrest, police may conduct a search incident to arrest to ensure the suspect has no weapons. If upon patting down the suspect, the police feel something that upon plain feel it is immediately apparent the item is contraband, the police may seize it.

Here, John was arrested for violating the ordinance. Because he was in a public place and protesting (a violation of the ordinance), police had probable cause to arrest John and so the arrest was valid. Upon arrest, officers had a right to conduct a search incident to arrest, which they did. The police took John's cellphone, however, which is not contraband and the facts do not state that it was immediately apparent to the officers that the phone would contain contraband but rather that they were seeing if the phone was hiding narcotics. The search was therefore permissible but seizing the phone was impermissible.

VI. Searching Phone

The issue is whether the officers violated John's right to privacy by looking in his phone. Under the Florida Constitution, there is a constitutional right to privacy. Under this right to privacy, individuals have a right to be free from government intrusion into their private lives. The right to privacy is a fundamental right explicitly stated in the Constitution and therefore there is more protection under the Florida Constitution than under the federal Constitution. A violation of the right to privacy requires the government to prove their actions were necessary for a compelling government purpose (strict scrutiny).

Here, there was likely no compelling government purpose to search the phone. Even if the police were lawfully able to view the outside of the phone, John had a right to privacy to the contents of his phone. Even if there was a compelling purpose, the search would not be necessary for the compelling purpose because John had already violated the ordinance and there was nothing further that could be gathered from the phone.

Search

The issue is whether the search of the phone was an unconstitutional search. Under the Florida and federal Constitution, individuals have a right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. A search is presumed unreasonable unless it is based on a warrant signed by a neutral and detached magistrate and based on probable cause in the places to be searched or items to be seized. Under the exclusionary rule, items gathered in violation of this right are inadmissible in court. Here, there was no warrant issued to search John's phone. Further, there are no exceptions available (exp. emergency) that would warrant a warrantless search of the phone. Therefore, the search of John's phone was illegal and the contents cannot be used against him.

VII. Bond

The issue is whether the judge was constitutionally permitted to keep John without bond. Under the Florida Constitution, there is a presumption that everyone is entitled to pretrial release unless the person is charged with (1) a life or capital offense; and (2) the evidence of guilt is great. If these conditions are met, a defendant is entitled to pretrial release unless there are no conditions that could ensure safety to the community or ensure the defendant's return to court. Here, John was charged with violation of a county ordinance, a violation which carries a maximum of a fine and 60 days in jail so it is not a capital or life offense. There is a presumption therefore that John is entitled to pretrial release unless there is an indication he won't return to court or is dangerous. According to the facts there is no such indication since the judge wanted to keep John until Thanksgiving just so he would "not violate the ordinance again." Wanting to prevent violation of the ordinance is insufficient to deny bond. Therefore, it was unconstitutional for the judge to deny bond and he is entitled to pretrial release.

B. Third Party Payment/Confidentiality

The issue is whether Lawyer can accept payment from Patty subject to Patty's conditions. Under Florida's ethics rules, a lawyer may not accept payment from a third party for representation on behalf of a client unless (1) the client gives informed consent; (2) the third party does not interfere with the lawyer-client relationship; and (3) confidentiality is maintained between the lawyer and the client. Confidentiality requires a lawyer to keep all communications with a client confidential unless the client consents otherwise.

Here, the client that would be represented is John. Patty, however, expressed that the committee is willing to pay for representation. For the committee to pay, however, Patty asks that Lawyer keep the committee and Patty updated on the case's progress and requires Lawyer to take John's case to trial and to appeal any rulings adverse to John. These conditions violate the above ethical rule because if John keeps Patty/the committee apprised of the case's progress, the lawyer may have to divulge confidential client communications, which is prohibited. Further, John would have to be the one directing representation, not Patty/the committee and requiring John to take John's case to trial/appeal adverse rulings would result in Patty/the committee directing representation. John may not want, for example, for the case to go to trial. Therefore, Lawyer may not accept payment from the committee under the stated conditions unless John gives consent to payment, gives consent to divulging confidential communications to keep Patty/the committee updated, and the condition requiring Patty/the committee to be allowed to direct representation is deleted.

PART II - SAMPLE MULTIPLE-CHOICE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Part II of this publication contains sample questions of the Florida multiple-choice portion of the examination. The questions and answers may not be reprinted without the prior written consent of the Florida Board of Bar Examiners.

The answers appear at the end of this section.

Applicable Law

Questions on the Florida Bar Examination should be answered in accordance with applicable law in force at the time of examination. Questions on Part A are designed to test your knowledge of both general law and Florida law. When Florida law varies from general law, the question should be answered in accordance with Florida law.

MULTIPLE-CHOICE EXAMINATION INSTRUCTIONS

These instructions appear on the cover of the test booklet given at the examination.

1. This booklet contains segments 4, 5, and 6 of the General Bar Examination. It is composed of 100 multiple-choice, machine-scored items. These three afternoon segments have the same value as the three morning segments.
2. Write your badge number in the box at the top left of the cover of your test booklet.
3. When instructed, without breaking the seal, take out the answer sheet.
4. Use a No. 2 pencil to mark on the answer sheet.
5. On the answer sheet, print your name as it appears on your badge, the date, and your badge/ID number.
6. In the block on the right of the answer sheet, print your badge/ID number and blacken the corresponding bubbles underneath.
7. STOP. Do not break the seal until advised to do so by the examination administrator.
8. Use the instruction sheet to cover your answers.
9. To further assure the quality of future examinations, this examination contains some questions that are being pre-tested and do not count toward your score. Time limits have been adjusted accordingly.
10. In grading these multiple-choice items, an unanswered item will be counted the same as an item answered incorrectly; therefore, it is to your advantage to mark an answer even if you must guess.
11. Mark your answers to all questions by marking the corresponding space on the separate answer sheet. Mark only one answer to each item. Erase your first mark completely and mark your new choice to change an answer.
12. At the conclusion of this session, the Board will collect both this question booklet and your answer sheet. If you complete your answers before the period is up, and more than 15 minutes remain before the end of the session, you may turn in your question booklet and answer sheet to one of the proctors outside the examination room. If, however, fewer than 15 minutes remain, please remain at your seat until time is called and the Board has collected all question booklets and answer sheets.

13. THESE QUESTIONS AND YOUR ANSWERS ARE THE PROPERTY OF THE BOARD AND ARE NOT TO BE REMOVED FROM THE EXAMINATION AREA NOR ARE THEY TO BE REPRODUCED IN ANY FORM.

46 SAMPLE MULTIPLE-CHOICE QUESTIONS

On February 15, 2018, Nancy and Al were divorced, but Nancy never got around to making a new will. Nancy died this year, and she was survived by Al, Earl, Brent, and her father, Norman Ritter. Which of the following statements regarding the distribution of Nancy's estate is correct?

- (A) Since a divorce revokes a will made during coverture, Nancy died intestate, and Earl and Brent will each take one-half of Nancy's estate.
 - (B) Earl and Brent will each take one-half of Nancy's estate because Nancy's will is void only as it affects Al Green.
 - (C) Since Nancy did not change her will within one year after her divorce from Al, Nancy's estate will be distributed exactly as stated in her will.

 - (C) Cooper may not use the deposition at trial, as March is able to testify and no exceptional circumstances exist.
 - (D) Cooper may not use the deposition at trial, as this would make March his witness and immune to impeachment.

Pete is incensed because it will probably take years to use up the inventory of so many toilets and seeks your advice. The best advice is
- (A) Bill can bind the partnership by his act.
 - (B) silent partners are investors only and cannot bind the partnership.
 - (C) unless his name is in the partnership name, third persons are "on notice" that he is unauthorized to contract for the partnership.
 - (D) Bill, as a silent partner, is not authorized to purchase and, therefore, the sale may be set aside.
9. The State of Florida is prosecuting a former police officer for extortion of money from prostitutes. One of the State's witnesses is Sally. Sally has an adult conviction for vehicular homicide. She was charged with driving a car in a reckless manner resulting in the death of her sister, a passenger in the car. Sally pleaded nolo contendere, was adjudicated guilty and received a suspended sentence although she could have received a sentence of state imprisonment up to 5 years. At trial, evidence of this conviction is
- (A) admissible to impeach Sally because vehicular homicide carries a maximum penalty in excess of 1 year.
 - (B) inadmissible to impeach Sally because she never admitted her guilt since she entered a plea of nolo contendere.
 - (C) inadmissible to impeach Sally because she received a suspended sentence.
 - (D) inadmissible to impeach Sally because she is only a witness and not the criminal defendant.
10. Dan was served with a subpoena to appear and testify at a civil trial by a 19-year-old process server. The process server lied about his age to get the job. The subpoena was issued by an attorney of record in the case and not by the clerk of the court.
- Dan would rather stay home than attend the trial. Dan consults with his attorney to find out if he must comply with the subpoena. The attorney should tell Dan to
- (A) comply with the subpoena to avoid the risk of being held in contempt by the court.
 - (B) object to the subpoena because it should have been issued by the clerk of court, not an attorney in the case.
 - (C) object to the subpoena because it was served by a 19 year old and, under Florida law, a process server must be no less than 21 years of age.

- (A) sustain all the objections and require the plaintiff to pursue this type of interrogation only during the plaintiff's cross-examination of this witness during the defendant's case-in-chief.
 - (B) sustain the leading question objections but overrule the other objections because a party is not permitted to ask leading questions of his own witness at trial.

 - (C) overrule the objection because only an offer to pay medical expenses is inadmissible under the Florida Evidence Code.
 - (D) overrule the objection because Murphy's statement was an admission.

Sam, in support of his claim that his failure to have his headlights on was not negligent, requests that the judge take judicial notice of the fact that Section 316.217, Florida Statutes, requires the use of headlights only between sunset and sunrise. Simpson died 10 years later. One year before he died, Bright Futures ceased operations because of lack of funding. Alice, Brian, and Thomas cannot agree on how to distribute the trust's remaining assets. Which is correct?

Turner hired a financial advisor to assist with managing the trust's assets. The value of the securities in the trust held steady for three years. Over that time, Turner monitored the securities' performance and provided annual accountings to Nelson.

In the three months since Turner last provided an accounting to Nelson, the value of the securities held by the trust dropped by 50%.

Nelson has been asking Turner whether downturns in certain segments of the stock market have affected the trust, but Turner has not responded. Nelson seeks your advice about whether he can take any action against Turner. Which is correct?
